Inchgower (2010/2023) - Sansibar

Sometimes you get a whisky in your glass that feels as if it has just come out of the cask. The Inchgower 2010/2023 from Sansibar with 57.6% ABV is just such a case: young, fresh, straight from nature - but also a little unfinished.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

The nose is crisp and fresh: green apple, a hint of pineapple and damp wood, as if it had just rained. There is also a fine herbal note reminiscent of herbal tea. Very green, very lively - but also without great depth. You can tell that wood had little to do here.

PALATE

It starts off sweet and juicy on the tongue: apple, a light tropical note and a fine dryness. But then it suddenly comes round the corner with white pepper and provides a bit of action. It remains a young, direct flavour - not complex, but certainly entertaining.

FINISH

Hardly any oak, but the sweet-fruity line continues with a tingling finish. At the very end, there is a slight bitterness that is not disturbing, but does not necessarily provide a rounded finish. You simply realise that the cask has only been working on the back burner here.

THOUGHTS

MARCEL

A whisky that delights with fresh fruitiness and a hint of pepper, though it could benefit from a bit more time in the cask - perfect for those who appreciate straightforward drinking pleasure without any fuss.

SASCHA

The Inchgower 2010/2023 presents itself with clear fruit notes and a noticeable pepperiness, but remains somewhat unbalanced due to the weak influence of the cask, showing that a more complex maturation would have served it well.
