Jura 10 Years

The Isle of Jura, a remote island on the west coast of Scotland, is known for being the only distillery to trade under the same name. The Jura 10 Years is a whisky that reflects both the wild nature of the island and the artisan tradition.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

At the first nosing, the Jura 10 years shows its fruity side. Notes of muesli and oatmeal meet the unusual aroma of fermented strawberries. There is a slight hint of chocolate, which gives the whisky a certain depth without being overpowering. The flavours are appealing, but already appear somewhat diffuse and less coherent here.

PALATE

On the palate, the Jura 10 Years unfolds a mixture of apricot, dark chocolate and toasted oak. Liquorice and cinnamon provide a spicy component, while raspberry notes add a fruity freshness. However, despite these diverse flavours, the taste is unsettled - it lacks the harmony you would expect from a whisky of this age. The flavours fight against each other rather than complementing each other, resulting in an overall unbalanced experience.

FINISH

The finish is short and slightly spicy, with a hint of oak. This reveals another shortcoming: the flavours that unfold in the mouth disappear just as quickly without leaving a lasting impression. Here, too, the restlessness in the overall profile is evident, which further clouds the enjoyment.

THOUGHTS

MARCEL

The Jura 10 Year offers a few nice fruity and chocolatey moments, but overall it feels somewhat scattered and fleeting – a whisky that is approachable but doesn't truly excite. It's fine for a relaxed drink now and then, but if you're looking for character and depth, you'd be better off looking elsewhere.

SASCHA

The lack of balance between the diverse aromas and the short, unsatisfying finish make the Jura 10 Year an underdeveloped example of its class. Despite some interesting notes, it lacks harmony and structural complexity, which significantly diminishes the overall enjoyment.
