TASTING NOTES

NOSE

The very first sniff reveals that this is no peat hammer. The smoke is there, but rather cool and subtle - like the scent of a cold campfire in the morning. This is joined by vanilla, fresh herbs, a hint of forest honey and an unripe banana, which together with a green apple bring a pleasantly fresh, almost crisp note.

PALATE

In the mouth, the smokiness remains subtle - not dominant, but accompanying. There is a cool, slightly meaty texture, almost like air-dried ham, plus vanilla and a delicate citrus note that refreshes the whole maritime flavour. Anyone expecting a lump of peat here will be pleasantly surprised: the smoke remains in the background and leaves room for subtle nuances.

FINISH

The finish is medium long and pleasantly soft. The smoke leaves quietly, but still leaves some BBQ flavour on the tongue. And then there is this one note - a hint of parsley.

MARCEL

For those seeking a gentle introduction to the world of smoky whisky, this offers a charming companion that scores with subtle spice and pleasant freshness. It's not a loud peat bomb, but rather a clever middle ground that's enjoyable and sparks curiosity for more. Perfect for connoisseurs who love character without going full throttle right away.

SASCHA

A well-balanced whisky that interprets Islay's peaty character in a discreet and structured way, without losing complexity. The subtle smoky note harmonizes with fruity and spicy nuances, giving this German single malt a clear, craft-driven profile. Solid quality that impresses with its fine balance and medium-length maturation.
