Teeling 21 Years - Rising Reserve No. 4 - White Wine Cask

Some whiskies do not captivate you loudly, but with quiet confidence. The Teeling 21 Years Rising Reserve No. 4 belongs precisely to this category. This Irish single malt tells a story of patience, cask craftsmanship and bold curiosity. In a short time, Teeling Distillery has earned a reputation for innovative maturation while consciously reconnecting with Ireland's great whiskey heritage. After 18 years in American white oak ex-bourbon casks, this whisky received a three-year finish in white wine casks. This combination sets high expectations for elegance, depth and balance. Bottled at 46 percent ABV, it promises intensity without harshness and invites you to slow down and listen closely to what this cask has to say.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

Right from the first nosing, the Teeling 21 Years presents itself as remarkably open and confident. An immediate, intense vanilla note rises from the glass and forms the foundation. Bright fruit aromas follow, led by citrus notes reminiscent of lemon zest and ripe grapefruit. This freshness is not sharp but wrapped in a warm sweetness of light malt and forest honey. With time in the glass, another layer unfolds. A fine cinnamon spice emerges, adding structure and depth. The influence of the white wine cask remains subtle, expressed more through elegant fruitiness than overt grape aromas. Overall, the nose feels clear, mature and well balanced, with no trace of alcoholic sharpness.

PALATE

On the palate, the whisky instantly delivers on what the nose promised. The mouthfeel is incredibly creamy and almost oily, a hallmark of well-aged whiskies. The initial impression is fruity and sweet, with juicy pineapple and a pronounced honey note. This sweetness feels natural and never cloying. Shortly thereafter, a spicy development takes over. Cinnamon and nutmeg come to the fore, adding tension and complexity. A gentle grape sweetness from the white wine cask lingers subtly, seamlessly linking fruit and spice. What stands out most is the balance. No single note dominates; everything feels precisely calibrated. The alcohol is perfectly integrated, supporting the flavors rather than overpowering them.

FINISH

The finish is full-bodied, dry and impressively long-lasting. Soft oak tannins gently coat the palate, conveying the calm authority that only extended maturation can provide. A bright, sweet fruit basket echoes on, accompanied by a renewed wave of spice in the background. Cinnamon and delicate oak spice slowly fade, leaving behind a warm and elegant impression. The finish feels mature, composed and deeply satisfying.

MARCEL

With the Teeling 21 Year Rising Reserve No. 4, you get an Irish whisky that doesn't shout loudly but simply convinces with its gentle sweetness and elegant spiciness.
