Whisky reviews. Since 2022.

The Westfalian TW57

It's hard to believe, but at 8 years old, this single cask single malt whisky from cask 57 is currently one of the older bottlings from Paderborn. Once again, we are excited to see what has been conjured up in our glass.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

A hint of BBQ and the scent of a charred barbecue grill awaken our senses and remind us of summer barbecues. Earthy nuances lend the bouquet a down-to-earth depth, while the gentle hint of an outgoing fireplace adds a nostalgic note. Sweet hints of ripe plums and the tantalising aroma of dates wrapped in bacon round off the olfactory experience.

PALATE

The first sip reveals a creamy texture that caresses the palate. Cold smoke and ash meet meaty notes reminiscent of a savoury BBQ sauce. The deep, dark chocolate combines harmoniously with a hint of burnt caramel, while the ultra-earthly notes lend an unmistakable depth. Surprising nuances of smoked ham, burnt fairground mushrooms and the aroma of leather and rosemary contribute to a fascinating flavour experience.

FINISH

The finish is long and astringent, with a subtle tart note of Amarena cherries unfolding. Black pepper and a subtle oak presence round off the finish, which ends with a pleasant dryness and a hint of spice.

THOUGHTS

MARCEL

With its smoky BBQ charm and sweet-savory notes, The Westfalian TW57 is an experience that's both fun and surprising. It challenges the drinker without ever becoming dull – a true character from Paderborn that leaves you wanting more.

SASCHA

The Westfalian TW57 impresses with its balanced structure and the complex interplay of smoky, sweet, and earthy aromas. The precise balance between intense flavor nuances and the long, spicy finish makes it a technically accomplished single cask whisky with great depth.
